Presidents Report

Greetings.... And welcome to our first newsletter for 2017. With Christmas behind us we are ready to move forward in to the new year. Let us focus on improving the society's impact on local community as well as enjoying friendship and fellowship with each other as meet together to enjoy our love for history and learning new things. Your committee has meet during the break to plan and prepare for 2017.

In recent years we have witnessed many changes throughout the world, some of them good, and some of them not so good. The latest upset in the political world in the USA caught us all by surprise. On any given day, the media hype suggests we are living in a world under siege as we read of war, terrorism, refugees, exotic diseases, recession, famine, climate change and the antics of Mr Trump. (The later could be considered humorous if they were not so serious).

One of the positive features that we don't know a great deal about is that world poverty has fallen faster during the past twenty years than in any previous time in history. As a result there has been many improvements in health status, infant mortality rates, educational opportunities (especially for woman) and improved democracy due to the downfall of several extreme right wing regimes such as the demise of communism and the collapse of the soviet union with the end of the cold war.

Unfortunately the mass media chooses not to report on these things, do give them the publicity they deserve.

I recently read on the editorial which summed up the situation with a very descriptive simile:

"Something big is coming. I can feel it. The way the human race is behaving at the moment reminds me of how ants get frantic before a big storm"

In closing, let us focus on the positives during 2017. May we enjoy good

Bunjurgen Estate Vineyard at Boonah on the 27 May 2017

The story of Bunjurgen Estate traces its heritage from the very early days of convict transportation to the Colony of New South Wales. John McMaugh, an Irishman, was transported and served his sentence on a series of cattle properties in the Macleay River valley, which is very close to Port Macquarie. Four generations later, a descendant of the original McMaugh family established a vineyard selection in the Teviot Valley, near Boonah in Southern Queensland in a location known locally as Bunjurgen. The property was named "Bellbrook" after the original area named by Caroline McMaugh in the Macleay Valley in 1842. A fitting historical touch. Whilst the privations of the convict era are no longer present, the hard physical work and continual demands of establishing and developing a vineyard have a contemporary parallel with John McMaugh's convict experiences of Port Macquarie 175 years ago.

Resource Centre Report - February 2017

Lota House – 150 years old

On Monday 23 January 2017 members of the Society were present at a Morning Tea to celebrate the birthday of the house. The house is the oldest brick built house remaining in the district.

Michael White, a great great grandson of the builder of the house and James Mylne a great great grandson were present.

William Duckett White bought the land at Lota in 1860 and the house was completed in 1867. Jane White, William’s wife, owned the house until her death in 1887 then their youngest son Albert until 1908.

From 1908 to 1914, William “Duckett” White, William and Jane’s grandson, son of their eldest son Ernest did many alterations and renovations. In 1914 Graham Ernest Mylne and his family moved in and remained there until 1961. Graham was a grandson of William and Jane, son of their daughter Helena.

In 1961 the house and grounds passed to the Anglican Diocese of Australia through a legacy from Sir Edwin Marsden Tooth. The Memorial Home for the Aged opened in 1963.

Read all about Lota House and its people in the new book “Lota House. Photographs and Images over 150 years” on display in the Resource Room.

The book is not only about buildings and places that no longer exist, but also highlights the changes in landscapes, streetscapes, work places, transport and recreational pursuits. “

A great pity that the theatres of Wynnum were not accurately researched!!

Main Store: BAY TERRACE, WYNNUM Phones: Wyn. 202
Branch Store: GLENORA STREET, WYNNUM Wyn. 54

The business was sold in December 1976 and the following report was printed in the Wynnum Herald.

“Wynnum Hardware firm changes owners”

The old established Wynnum store trading as F Farley & Sons Pty Ltd of 120 Bay Terrace, has changed hands after being run as a family business for over 40 years. It has been officially announced that the business has been purchased by McIlwraith Distributors (Qld) Pty Limited, which is a subsidiary of the firm of John McIlwraith Industries, of Melbourne.

The firm of John McIlwraith which is incorporated in Victoria, is a very large brass manufacturing concern, which turns out a full range of products in both brass and stainless steel, catering for the trade. A wholly owned Australian company, John McIlwraith has stores established throughout Australia.

Founder of the Wynnum business, Mr Fred Farley senior, came to Queensland from England with his wife and four sons around 1929 and soon afterwards opened a grocery store in Tingal Road, Wynnum. After about five years the business moved to Bay Terrace where a grocery store was conducted alongside the site of the National Bank. As the business grew and branched out into hardware, larger premises became necessary so that in 1952 a new double storey section was built.

Farleys at that time had two stores separated by a vacant allotment and it would have been in 1955 that further extensions were made in the centre. The founder of the business died in 1964, at the age of 89 years after a lifetime of service in business, in community involvement and through his church work.

GROUP

The business continued to prosper under the management of the founder's three sons – Messrs Alan, Arnold and Ken Farley, who, in 1963, became members of the expanding Mitre 10 Group of Stores, being one of the first businesses to join up when the Group moved into Queensland.

The grocery side section had long been discarded and the family firm now concentrated upon supplying hardware and building materials, tools and paints as well as garden supplies and the hundred and one interior and external fittings needed in homes.

SAME NAME

In an interview with "The Herald" this week Mr Bill Matchett who will manage the Wynnum store said the business would trade under the name of "Farley's Hardware". "We are very proud to have been able to purchase the business of the Farley family – it is well known and has carried the respect of the district residents for many years". "It is our intention to continue giving service to the residents in the same family atmosphere as people have been accustomed to down the years" Mr Matchett said.

EXPANDING

In the New Year Farley's Hardware will be expanding with the setting up of a tradesman plumbing supplies department. "We hope in the near future to also establish a tradesman supplies for painters and builders in the area. "At the present time we are carrying out a programme of rearrangement with regard to the fixtures and counters in the store and when this is completed we feel that customers will enjoy a greater degree of comfort and less effort in the selection of their requirements from the different departments within the store. "As far as our operations here are concerned we will be continuing to run this business with the former Farley's Hardware staff – there will be no alteration to the staff personnel" Mr Matchett said. At the present time there are seven McIlwraith Distributors (Qld) Pty Limited stores in the group established in Queensland. Another store is in the course of construction in Cleveland.

THE MANAGER

Mr Bill Matchett is the Farley's Hardware store's manager who came to Australia from Bournemouth, England 10 years ago. He is married with a daughter aged 23 months.

Mr Matchett worked with the firm of John Line and Sons, wallpaper and paint merchants in England before coming to Australia. He served with the Australian Army for five years and saw active service in Vietnam. Since receiving his discharge Mr Matchett has been for five years in the hardware industry prior to coming to Wynnum last week. Mr Matchett is a keen fisherman and has had some success on deep sea trips in recent times. He is also a squash player, enjoys a round of golf and sits down to a game of chess when the opportunity arises.

APPRECIATION

Mr Ken Farley said on behalf of himself and two brothers, Arnold and Alan, that they are extremely grateful to the people of the Wynnum district who have consistently patronized the store which has led to the steady development of F Farley and Sons Pty Ltd.

"Many friends have been made over the years who have been really appreciated. We have endeavoured always to give fair and honest trading and we feel sure the new proprietors will continue to do the same". We also pay tribute to the members of our staff who, with us, have seen Wynnum grow into what is now a thriving high class bayside suburb.

All our staff members will be staying on with the new management, who, no doubt, will carry on in the same friendly atmosphere that we endeavoured always to maintain" Mr Farley said.

"We have appreciated the friendly atmosphere that has always existed between us and the other Wynnum traders and take this opportunity to wish all a Very Happy Christmas and a Prosperous New Year".

SARAH'S ROCKS

By the late Llew Gronberg

Just below Fort Lytton near the mouth of the Brisbane River, but beyond the line of the mangroves, there are a few flat rocks almost submerged in the mud. I have always known them as Sarah's Rocks. The naming of these rocks is a small tribute to a remarkable aboriginal woman whom I once knew. I have special memories that my youth was dominated by my relationship with Sarah. Sarah Moreton was old when I was young, consequently, I grew up with Sarah as a mentor. She was one of the many women who have mothered me during my life. I suppose it would be correct to say that she filled the role of a very, very ancient matriarch. Yet I remember her as a young-in-spirit older sister.

She always looked the same. Only once did I see her not wearing a billowing hand-me-down cotton print dress. However, that is a separate story of its own. Also, she never wore anything under the dress which was simply slipped over her naked body. I knew this, because, on several occasions over the years, I caught a glimpses of her naked body under the dress.

My mother said that when she was young she also remembered Sarah as old. She often told me about the time she befriended Sarah. It seems that Sarah was being beaten by Peter Barton, the man in her life at the time. Grandfather Feige intervened and gave Barton a terrible thrashing, which resulted in Barton running away to leave Sarah to her own devices. Subsequently, Sarah claimed that Grandfather was responsible for her welfare since he had dispossessed her of her lover and meal ticket. She often said to me "That grandfather of yours! He's one of my husbands, but he never married me."

The upshot of the whole affair was that Grandfather jokingly told her that she could live on the vacant land on the foreshore of Moreton Bay at the northern end of Wynnum. Obviously, he didn't have the authority to give anyone permission for anyone to live on the site. But, she believed him and she simply squatted among the prickly pears that grew on the barren shores. Old timers still call the area "The Black's Camp."

Sarah's skin was ebony black and shiny and I suppose that almost everyone would say she was ugly, but to me she was beautiful and the most important person outside my family. I vividly remember that my mother was Sarah's favourite person. At the time they would tease each other outrageously. One could be excused for thinking they were fierce rivals. They were two magnificent women, kindred spirits, one aboriginal, the other Irish-German.

Each loved the other with that sense of camaraderie that develops when each is comfortable with their awareness of their personal strengths and weaknesses. An uneasy respect for the other is the basis of the love that they share.

Naturally, they were outrageous to each other.

Sarah would say to my mother, "Why d' you stay with that old Knut. He's no good! You get yourself a good man." For some reason she disliked my father. Knut, who was Swedish. I suspect that she was aware of the jingoistic streak about him. She would say to her, "Next time, he beats you, you come and live with me!" My mother would simply laugh. She knew that Knut was much too afraid of her to resort to any violence.

However, it was her love and knowledge of the land and her childlike affection for those who befriended her, that held me to her. Yes, her overpowering love for me attracted me to her. Eventually, she taught me the things that she had taught my mother. We spent endless hours wandering across the mud flats of the bay. With her thin arms and legs protruding from her dress billowing in the breeze. She would walk ahead of me with her stick in her hand.

The stick was like an extension of her body. It was more than a simple tool. She used it to extend the range of her influence on the environment. She would use it to turn creatures over. She would say softly, "Pick that up! That's good tucker." Or "See that, it's bad. Make you very sick in belly." Or "That fella, he sting

Her language was a mixture of two cultures, Aborigine and European, but her lore was definitely Aboriginal. It was rumoured that she had been born of a union between the son of a wealthy squatter and a local aboriginal woman. She had been taken away from her mother and sent to a special finishing school in Tasmania, but she tired of this and ran away. I suspect that she was better educated than most of the local residents in Wynnum.

I thought her camp was a combination of Aladdin’s Cave, Kismet and Valhalla. My every spare moment was spent with her.

She would say, “Here! I’ll give you something beautiful to eat.” Then she would take a creature out of her dilly bag, which was a folded sugar bag with a shoulder strap of a cast off length of twine. Mostly the food was fish, crabs and oysters. Occasionally, it was wild duck. On one occasion she said that she was going to give me a treat and she took a flying fox out of her bag and holding it by the small claws on its wings, plunged it into a billy of boiling water to scald it then she peeled the skin from the body and stewed the remains in the billy with some potatoes and onions. “If you cook him that way, you get rid of the smell.”

Often I would remain at her camp after dusk and sit with her at the camp fire. “Les’ie You stay tonight, then you get firewood.” She would direct me as she handed me an axe that was almost worn out and sported a short homemade handle.

Later, I strolled into the mangroves and carried huge bundles of kindling for her. My! She was proud of me. I can still remember the praise she gave me for my strength and manliness. Sarah was totally uninhibited. On cold nights around the fire she would say. “Les’ie! Come over here and sit by me and I’ll keep you warm.” She would lift up the corn sack that she had drape over her thin shoulders like a cape and draw me in. She would giggle and snuggle me as she would say, “Like two possums in a hollow log!”

The time this statement transported me back into the earth. Yes! She was to me, Ishtar, the ancient mother of the earth. Mind you she was wasn’t a glossy sophisticated goddess, she was more like the smell of sweet compost, a substance holding the wonderful promise of life. And, it was then she would sing a lullaby – A lullaby she had crooned to her unborn child, she told me. The doctor, he took my baby away when I was very young in a far off place called Tasmania. At the time this statement meant little to me, other than an awareness that she had lost a child.

Later in life I realised that Sarah had lost her child through abortion. I realise that her wealthy squatter grandfather had mistakenly thought he was helping her. Perhaps I was her surrogate child. I like to think so.

Sarah Moreton, is said to be one of the last Aboriginal women, who lived at “Black’s Camp (Elanora Park). Sarah worked in the home of Leslie’s Grandmother, Mary Feige (nee Hennessy). The Feige family came to Wynnum about 1901 and had thirteen children.
